Provide details below

Immediately after commissioning, which was well within the original licence period, a complaint, about noise, was lodged with the council, by a neighbour, and I was ordered not to run the turbine until the level of noise could be evaluated.

We were also forced to move the grid connection as a result of a change of ownership of a building/site.

Noise testing took 2 years!, with a great deal of argument and discussion, and was performed without generation.

Ultimately the site was deemed not to be a noise nuisance but it was strongly recommended that an enclosure, for the turbine and generator, be constructed to further reduce the potential for a nuisance to be perceived. Work on the new building was planned, with the typical delays and complexities and eventually undertaken.

More or less at this point Covid messed everything up leading to significant delays which were further compounded by the protracted effects on my health as a result of a Covid infection towards the end of the pandemic,

During this period parts of the system, most notably the pipeline, was damaged, and the intake blocked, by a person, or persons, unknown. Rectification of these issues involved opening the pipeline in several places, causing further delay.

Early last year the site was eventually in a state where recommissioning could again be considered. Item one, get a meter installed on the 'new' supply.

This seemingly quick process took well over 6 months and although a meter was finally installed, with import and export contracts put in place, the process can only be described as tortuous...

The site is now, bar for testing and commissioning that would require abstraction, all but ready to run as intended with all generation being exported to the grid.

The turbine, pipeline and abstraction provisions are exactly as described in the original licence and will remain so.
