4. Details of our assessment

Routine inspection of Dyffryn House and gardens for permit AN0174601. Attendance by Environment Officer Harry Warburton and Environmental Assistant Lauren Quantick. Accompanied by members of the National Trust facilities team. The treatment plant consists of a settlement/septic tank, followed by two biospiral aeration units and a final effluent monitoring point.

The site appeared all in good working order, all process units were operational and the final effluent was clear. The plant is serviced once a year. Service reports are kept on site, as well as transfer notes for the tankering of the septic tank sludge. It was mentioned that the aeration units may be emptied and desludged in the near future since they have not been inspected before and sludge may have settled over the years when some of the aeration blowers break down

The outfall to the River Waycock was able to be inspected due to the vegetation having been cut back, the outfall was running clear with no signs of impact to the river.
